Digitising Patterns of Power
&
Mapping Medieval Conflict

Digitising, Analysing, Visualising and Communicating historical and archaeological data using digital tools and methods

Digital Humanities become more and more popular and an important backbone for nearly all of the respective projects are databases. They range from simple Excel sheets to highly sophisticated object oriented data models. The lecture will give an overview on various projects (e.g. Mapping Medieval Conflict, Digitising Patterns of Power), discuss how their data are recorded and communicated. In a second part the participants will create their own data collection and -structure using the OpenAtlas system. Then they will discuss the results, problems and perspectives and visualise the recorded information.

Seminář potrvá cca do 12.00; veden bude v anglickém jazyce.
