Data versioning

A new version of a data record is created when changes are made to stored data files (adding new files, deleting files).

If the metadata description is changed, a new version is not created. The original data record is modified.

A copy of the metadata form opens. The 'Data Change Description' field must be filled in. This field contains information about which files have been added, deleted, or updated. The version is only specified for software. For other types of data, the field is not filled in. The version number is assigned automatically.

The record must be saved, and the files attached.

After being sent to the catalogue, the new versions are assigned a handle and DOI identifier. The record is linked to previous versions.
